

This traffic we think can be spun out over the few months remaining before D Day and offers a reasonable prospect of deceiving the enemy that we still have confidence in these agents.

with regard to agents who have offered various plausible reasons for refusing to join the our Hat Week policy in Holland, we have decided to signal them that if they are unable to tackle the bigger men, they should turn their attention to the lower level informers or traitors, who are in fact more dangerous than the better known Quislings.

This we think should achieve the double purpose of the following: (1) the traffic and
